GENERAL SPORTING NEWS OF THE DAY

[CORRESPONDENCE OF THE DISPATCH.] SYDNEY, December 19,-Whether baseball gains a firm foothold or not in this section of Australia, there can be no regret on the part of the baseball combination for having traveled to the Autipodes. They have been treated with a generous hospitality that has had no limit to its excess, and the few days that have been spent here have been far too short to accept more than a measure of the courtesies extended to them. Whatever doubt existed as to the importance that the Australians would attach to the event of their coming was speedily dispelled an hour before the splendid harbor was reached. The Alameda was still behind time, but fortunately not sufficient to cause any further disappointment. She arrived within sight of the Heads about twilight, just as the last rays of the setting sun were tinting the picturesque hills that bordered the channel with a mellow, golden radiance. The first to greet the visitors were two steam-tues crowded with people who waved the American colors frantically and cheered themselve hoarse in their efforts to show the sincerity of their welcome. Brass bands on both sent out the inspiring strains of "Star Spangled Banner" and "Yankee Doodle," which were received with enthusiastic appreciation by the American visitors. As the boat approached close to the steamer cheers were freely exchanged. The ball players could scarcely have felt that they were coming among strangers, for the people on board the tugs singled out the prominent individuals in the party and cheered jubilantly for "Baby" Anson, Spalding, Ward jubiliantly for "Baby" Anson, Spalding, Ward and other well-known players. Further down the bay several steam yachts joined in the procession. Perhaps the prettiest effect of all was the welcome extended by a fictilia of boatmen. About 40 of their small craft, which were gayly decorated with flags and bunting, were formed in two lines wide enough apart to allow the Alameda to pass through. Several well-known oursmen salled about in their skiffs and added their recognition to the welcome to the American athletes.

COMMENTS ON THE GAME. If the attendance at the three games here is to be accepted as a measure of the local appre ciation of baseball, then the American game can hardly be considered to have achieved suc-cess. There were about seven or eight thousand people at the first game, but on the two subsequent days, notwithstanding the addition al attractions of cricket and a balloon ascension, there were not over fifteen hundred and one thousand people present. But iortunately this rather meager financial patronage is not a fair gauge of the impression which the national American game has made on the minds of Australians. Its skillful and scientific features commended themselves at once to those expert enough to appreciate good batting and fielding, while certain newspapers have extolled their superiority over cricketers in these respects in the most laudatory terms. In a review of the first game played the Evening Neur expressed the following opinion of the playing:

"As a rule, cricketers here did not seem inclined to favor the new (to us) game, but those among them who would honestly admit their convictions frequently and heartily applauded the magnificent throwing and catching exhibited. The Australian cricketers made one of their strongest claims to recognition in the great world of cricket through their fielding and bowling, but never, during the career of any sion, there were not over fifteen hundred and great world of cricket through their fielding and bowling, but never, during the career of any Australian eleven, have such fielding and throwing been seen as the All-America and Chicago teams showed us. They worked systematically, swiftly and quietly, with deliberation even on many occasions when a striker's dismissal was a foregone conclusion. But this was always the case. In nearly two hours of brisk and exciting play not a hall was mised. brisk and exciting play not a ball was missed or 'fumbled;' it was taken on the fall or from the ground faultlessly and returned with a pre-cision to which we are quite unaccustomed and of which few among our best cricketers are

"Though pretty well worn out with the cricket and subsequent ball practice, the team showed wonderful smartness, and any mar possessing a spark of taste for athletics mus possessing a spark of taste for athletics must have admired the exhibition of speed, strength, quickness of thought and hand and general git up and gittishness' displayed. To truly appreciate the intense eleverness displayed, one must have a slight inkling of the game; given that, and I reckon it is the best game for onlookers there is. There is a constant fever of excitement. The ball and men are always on the go, and each instant there is some bit of lightning work to interest and arouse enthusiasm."

THE FIRST CONTEST.

The opening game took place on the day following the team's arrival, December 19. The weather was quite threatening, and horse racing in one of the suburbs may have further affected the attendance. A noticeable feature was the large number of ladies present, fully one-half of the assemblage being of the fair sex. There was a picturesqueness about the crowd, too, that is never seen at a ball game in America, and it was largely due to the charac-America, and it was largely due to the charac-ter of the grounds. As a baseball field it was a revelation to the ball players and other mem-

America, and it was largely due to the character of the grounds. As a baseball field it was a revelation to the ball players and other members of the party.

The ground, which is enclosed from the crowd by a low, white picket fence, is in the shape of an oval, and is about a quarter of a mile long and about a sixth of a mile wide. The grass is cut close and is almost as smooth and even as a billiard-cloth. At the upper end of the ground, opposite the longer diameter is a fine two-story club house, with rows of seats in front reserved for the use of members. Adjoining it is a cottage reserved for the ladies of the members, with seats in front capable of accommodating several hundred. Both of these buildings are placed back about 30 feet from the fence, as is also the handsome main grand stand, which will seat about 3,000 people. The lower portion of the latter is built of brick. In the center is the special box of the Governor of the colony. The space between the fence and the first two-mentoned buildings is laid out with pretty flowerbeds, while the lawn in front of the grand stand is utilized as a promenade, and it was an unual and pretty sight at a baseball game to see the neatly-dressed ladies walking up and down during the progress of the game. The length of a cricket game makes this custom enjoyable, but it is not likely to live should baseball become popular. Around the other side of the small fence is a green sward that slopes backward about 30 feet. About six rows of seats encircle the space close to the fence, but the spectators evidently prefer to loll and lounge on the grass while they watch the sports. The "bleaching boards" had scarce an occupant. The baseball yourds" had scarce an occupant of the marrow part of the ellipse. A stout cord netting was put up as the "backstop's" fence, an arrangement that might be introduced to advantage on many league baseball grounds for apart from protecting the spectators agreat deal of unnecessary noise would be avoided. The arrangements are such that 20,000 peop could easily see a game without encroaching on the players' field. When the teams marched on the groud they were received with a hearty clapping of hands. Their handsome uniforms and their fine, athletic figures were universally complimented.

A DEMONSTRATIVE CROWD. After the first innings the game was well played, scarce an error being made. While the natives were unable to appreciate the close score and exciting character of the contest they were exceedingly demonstrative when clean hits were made, fine fly catches were made by the outfielders or bases were stolen. They doubtless comprehend the difficulty of scoring runs, for Daly's home-run hit provoked prolonged applause. A splendid fly catch by Hanlon was greeted with a similar outburst. Bandon was greeted with a similar outburst. But what amused them above all was the clever base stealing of the All-Americas. As at Auckland, an attempt to catch a base runner napping and his quick side and fail to the base was always the signal for uproarous laughter and continued amplance.

The game was well played on both sides, and the victory of the All-Americans by a score of 5 to 4 was due principally to their heavy batting and clever base running. They are superior to the Chicagos in both these features, but especially the latter. Annon's players appear to have a wholesome dread of little Earle's throwing to bases. Daly's work was far below his standard last season. Superior batting and base running also won the following two games for Ward's team of picked men. Anson caught in the second contest and played a good game, with the exception of his somewhat weak throwing to bases. The games were not so well played as the opening one, the players being fatigued from cricket playing prior to the game. Owing to Crane's indisposition Healy pitched in all three games for the All-Americas. His work was most creditable and goes to prove how much more successful a twirler will be with a team back of him to encourage his efforts, instead of "sharlers" to dampen his ardor. THE CRICKET MATCH.

The cricket match on the 18th between a baseball 18 and a Sydney 11 was an extremely onesided affair in favor of the Australians as regards run-getting. Only one inning was played, the ball-tossers making but 81 runs, while the Australians counted up 115 with only six out. In fielding, however, the Americans played with remarkable brilliancy, and their work was liberally applauded. Pfeffer, Burns and Anson made fine catches, and the Australians believe the last-named would make an equally able cricketer as he is ball player if he would devote his entire time to it. What the Americans lack most are competent bowlers.
With their present force run-getting is easy.
It would be hazardous to predict that baseball will be taken up here and become a permanent amusement. The people are devoted to cricket, but it is possible that base-ball may be supported as a winter amusement in place of football. The manager of the Association cricket grounds as said to be opposed to football, as it is rough and spoils the turf, and he has expressed a determination to try baseball next winter. The older natives and Englishmen persist in calling it "rounders," but admit its scientific improvement.
Should the venture ever be made to organize clubs, so that the spirit of rivalry will give the people an opportunity of betting, the game may flourish. Australians bet on everything, and baseball evidently gives them abundant scope to exercise this spirit, for even during the three games here they already made wagers on runs being scored or not in the different innines.

They not only express the warmest adm'ration for it, as already noted, but seem inclined to study out its points and methods of scoring. Smith's challenge to Kilrain, however, is more important and doubtless is made in good faith. Their last encounter was more of a burlesque than anything else, and it may be that Smith is inclined to go on the "square" this time. The same may be said of Kilrain. A genuine battle between these two puglists would be a very important event in the sporting world. However, if the Sullivan-Kilrain contest is to proceed it will be impossible for Smith and Kilrain to meet before next fall. It is also stated that Bill Goode, the English middle-weight, is coming to this country next middle-weight, is coming to this country next month to fight Jack Dempsey.

It was understood to be an exhibition round, and, though more hard hitting was done than in the previous rounds, the police did not interrupt the men, and Brennan was not knocked out.
